Cope, Woodroof emphasize families

by Ron Turner
Bison staff writer

Tim Woodroof, a Harding University graduate from Lincoln, Neb., spoke this week about marriage and families during the four-day College church meeting.

Woodroof, the brother of David Woodroof who works in the Media Center, did not plan to preach when he came to Harding. In fact, he graduated from the university with a Psychology major. He also has a degree in marriage and family counseling and works with the church in Lincoln, Neb.

Woodroof's series of lessons followed a series of lessons by Mike Cope last fall called "Fit To Be Tied." Like Woodroof's series, Cope's lessons emphasized strengthening marriage and family in today's world.

Woodroof and Cope, who are married and have children themselves, are qualified to speak about the family. But that is not the only prerequisite to speaking about the family. The other element is that the speakers are capable of clearly speaking on God's behalf — and that takes preparation.

Last summer, the church allowed Cope to have two weeks off during which he made no appointments and did no preaching. He used this time to study for his series. He researched articles and books, and he etched out where he would like the series to go.

Cope does an outline and writes notes on each lesson, and he invests an average of 12 hours preparation time on each sermon.

Cope says that the authority of any speaker is because he speaks on behalf of God. A speaker always has flaws, but an intense study of God's word helps him. "Relationships are difficult," Cope says. But, he feels that ten years of marriage certainly qualified him to speak on marriage.

Engaged Seminar slated this weekend

For those getting married in the near future, there is never enough talk about strengthening family bonds.

"For this reason..." (taken from Ephesians 5:30) has been chosen as the theme for this year's enrichment seminar for engaged and newlywed couples that will be held tonight and tomorrow at the College Church.

Activities will include a Valentine Banquet in the Fellowship Room tonight, and many speakers. Speakers and topics are as follows: Lew Moore, welcome; Dwight and Barb Smith, the couple's commitment to communication; Dean and Carolyn Priest, the couple's commitment to individual roles and responsibility; Neale and Treva Pryor, the couple's commitment to God; Ken and Mary Johnson with Bob and Charlann Reely, the couple's commitment to stewardship (money management); Mike and Shelley Lincoln, the couple's commitment to intimacy.

Contact Dwight and Barb Smith, campus ministers, for more information.

Cold temperatures inside as well as outside

by Greg Taylor
Bison editor

While temperatures outside dipped into the teens this week, temperatures inside the campus dormitories fell to all-time lows.

Students in several dorms could not get hot water or enough heat Sunday and Monday and some were forced to sleep in dorm lobbies to avoid the uncomfortably low temperatures in the rooms.

"It (the cold) was unbearable in our room," one dorm resident said. "About 15 girls in my dorm slept in the lobby one night this week" because it was too cold in the rooms.

Why when thermostats are turned to 75 degrees have the rooms remained below 65 degrees?

Bill Ryan, Physical Plant Engineer, explains.

"It is the same problem we had last year. We had a piece of equipment down, one of our main engines which produces steam, so we didn't have enough heat to go around."

Most of the dorms are heated with steam which comes from the Harding Co-Generation plant located behind the Administration Building. When there is an engine down, there is not enough heat to go around, but Ryan says the engine was fired back up Monday and most dorms should be reasonably comfortable. So thermostats should be reading actual temperatures again.

The students helped the power plant this week by cutting back on time in the showers. It gave the plant extra steam it needed to heat the dorms when they needed it.

"We asked the students to cut back on the amount of time they were in the showers (early this week). When dorm residents take long or excessive showers it causes a shortage of heat to the dorms, because both the shower water and the climate in the dorms are heated by steam from the plant. The extra steam going to heat the showers takes away from the heat needed for climate control.

"The students cut back on showers enough to help us back to normal temperatures," Ryan said.

Hornsby to hit Harding Feb. 25

by Andrea Lively
Bison staff writer

Coming Feb. 25, to the Benson Auditorium, is Bruce Hornsby and the Range. Ticket order forms were placed in campus mail. Tickets before the break are $13 and all others are $10. The concert begins at 8:00 p.m.

Steve Beliech, Assistant Dean of Men, said, "They requested many amenities in their contract which took awhile to reshape to fit Harding's structure." Beliech added, "We think people in high school and college will appreciate this concert more than recent shows."

Hornsby has very high marks from their agency. The concluded that any group that has any association with Huey Lewis is a good group. Huey Lewis produced three tracks on The Way It Is, and recorded a song by the Hornsbys, "Jacob's Ladder."

The Hornsbys received a grammy in 1986 — "Best New Artist of 1986." As grateful as he is for this and his first album, The Way It Is, it's his second new album, Scenes from the Southside, that has got him jazzed. Hornsby said, "Frankly, I think this music is a

American Studies brings Tarkenton Former pro football great to speak

Veteran NFL quarterback Fran Tarkenton will speak at the Benson Auditorium Thursday, February 16, at 7:30 p.m.

Tarkenton was quarterback for the Minnesota Vikings and the New York Giants for 18 years. He led the Vikings to Super Bowls in 1973, 1975 and 1976 and was voted Most Valuable Player in the NFL in 1975. He is a member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame and the College Football Hall of Fame.

Tarkenton has written Playing to Win - Strategies for Business Success, which has also been made into a film, and his newest title, How to Motivate People.

Tarkenton will open the American Studies spring lecture series with no charge to the public.

HU students give little to College Church

Harding students pile the College Church collection plates to the brim with bright yellow cards. Then the heap of attendance cards is sifted, and the money lies in the bottom of the plate. Most weeks the contribution to the Lord's work at the College Church amounts to about $14,500. But how much of this do the 1,000 plus Harding students plop in the collection?

Let's see:

The second week in November, the contribution was $14,199.14. Then, the next two weeks, when almost a third of the congregation (Harding students) left town for Thanksgiving, the contribution did something surprising — it hardly changed. Though one would expect a marked decline in the amount of money taken up when nearly 30 percent of the congregation was absent, it actually increased to $14,432.83. The next week, the students still gone, it was $14,547.84. This pattern continued when we left for Christmas.

Theoretically, the average Harding student's giving to the College Church amounts to zero.

We have been convicted by these numbers to encourage each member of Jesus' Church to examine his or her giving. Clearly, giving to the work of a congregation which Harding students are a part of has been ranked dead last. We have gone from giving first fruits to giving of last fruits. Spoils have become spoiled, and God is getting rotten leftovers. Suppose you give a week's supply of food to a neighbor in need, knowing that to function you too must have part of the food yourself. But instead of returning a good portion, the beggar returns only the moldy fly-infested remains of his feast. That is what we stand to do to God — and with his money.

Why don't we give more? Some do when a need arises — a friend can't make all of his apartment payment this month, a stranger wants 10 bucks for some food, a shut-in needs a bag of groceries. But giving has become an option for most Christians. Instead, it ought to be an obligation, the will of God. For some of us who have gone astray in our thinking, giving is often viewed as our big favor to God. Our giving should instead be a mark of thankfulness, dependence on God. A pure sacrifice to God, not a basket of shriveled apples. A person who relies on himself can't rely on God. Shouldn't our giving be extended beyond our means enough that we depend on God to keep caring for us? After all, the money is his.

An informal survey of a college freshmen class taken in 1985 showed that several students spent as much as $75 a week on non-essential purchases like movie tickets, compact discs and tapes, room decorations, and Wal-Mart impulse items. Yet, the same persons gave as little as $2 a week to the work of the Lord. This is outrageous. But the indication is that giving money to a specific cause, like the College Church, is fast becoming a fatally forgotten task. We sing "gladly I'll forfeit all of earth's treasures, Jesus your perfect likeness to wear," but two minutes later we dig out of our Gucci purses and Bugle Boy slacks the leftovers from a Little Rock weekend.

The objective is not to give just to see how much we can pool together. We pool our money to spend on the poor, the unsaved, the homeless. If anyone is blessed it is because of God. But white-knuckled persons can't believe that. They hold on to wealth with every ounce of strength they have. If a college student has money to give, though it be a small amount, and does not give from that amount, how can he expect to be open-handed when he pulls in $80,000 a year?

What is the root of our giving, or lack of giving? The presence or absence of Christ. He said to give proportionally to what we have. If we have nothing, how can we give anything? If we have a little, how can we not give of it? If we have a heap, how can we not level it to the ground for the sake of the lost? The closer we are to Christ, the easier it is to give to his cause. Randy Maddox said it: If you give sacrificially, you can expect to be poor, with no money in your pocket. And Jesus said there is nothing wrong with being poor. In fact, we are probably better off.

The signposts on Christ's road never say "all the riches you want ahead." Jesus promised to take care of us, while we take care of others. Our needs are far less than our wants, but the desire of the hungry to be fed and the lost to be found is a need we cannot deny — and that takes not only our time and our lives, but also our money.

— G. T.

Happiness is a gift

A number of years ago in North Virginia, an old man stood at the river bank waiting to get across. Since it was bitterly cold and there were no bridges, he would have to catch a ride to the other side. After a long wait, he saw a group of horsemen approaching. He let the first one pass, then the second, third, fourth, and fifth. Finally, there was one rider left. As he came beside him, the old man looked him in the eye and said, "Sir, would you give me a ride across the river?"

Time Out
Mark Thomas

The rider, without a thought said, "Why certainly, get aboard." Once across the river, the old man slid to the ground. Before leaving, the rider said, "Sir, I could not help but notice that you permitted all the other riders to pass without asking for a ride. Then, when I drew abreast, you immediately asked me for a ride. I'm curious to know why did you not ask them but asked me?" The old man quickly responded, "I looked into their eyes and could not see love, and I knew in my heart it would be useless to ask for a ride. But when I looked into your eyes I saw compassion, love, and the willingness to help. I knew you would be glad to give me the ride across the river."

With this, the rider very humbly said, "You know, I'm very grateful for what you are saying. I appreciate it very much." With that, Thomas Jefferson turned and rode off to the White House.

It has truly been said that our eyes are windows of our souls. Just by simply looking in one's eyes we can see the character that person will have for that time. We can make our stay here at Harding the best experience of our lives, but only if you make it better for others also. You get the best out of others when you give the best of yourself. God has given us the privilege of making our lives better, but only if we do the things necessary to receive happiness.

Congress shouldn't get 51 percent pay hike

Dana Deree

During the last year the average American received between a four and five percent pay raise.

That's not too bad. But how would you like to receive a 51 percent pay raise when you already receive four times more income than most citizens? I know what you are asking yourselves, "That's great; where do I sign up for a job like that?" Simple, just run for Congress.

At first it made sense to me. After all, it can be mighty expensive to keep a home in East Cupcake, Calif., and one in the Washington area, then fly back and forth dozens of times a year. After some thought, though, it seemed a bit hypocritical. These same lawmakers who earn from $89,500 to $115,000 and want that to jump some 50 percent to between $135,000 to $175,000 voted against a 35 cent per hour minimum wage increase for people who can have full time jobs yet still struggle for economic survival beneath the poverty rate. That is hogwash!

Our president is a conservative kind of guy when it comes to financial concerns, especially after his promise to use all means possible to curb our huge federal deficit. Surely, he will stand up against this robbery of the American people. That's what I thought until he stated at his press conference this week that the pay hike is long overdue. President Bush is getting the best deal of all. His pay is to be increased from $200,000 to $350,000 a year. Plus he gets to stay in that big house for free and have his own airplane and limo.

The best part about this deal for Congress is that they don't even have to vote for it. The responsibility has been given to a commission. This way Senator Blueblood can claim that he didn't support the pay hike and was forced to accept the decision while he deposits his thousands in to the bank. Pretty clever if I do say so myself.

I'm sorry. Perhaps I misread the Constitution when we went over it in my American National Government class. It seems to me that it was the writers plan for the Congress to make decisions for us average folk with our country's benefit in mind. Silly me.

Mister Writer puts neighbor through the wringer

Good morning, everyone. Welcome to Mr. Writer's Neighborhood. Yes, I know it's been a long time since we've seen each other. Let's just say that Mr. Writer has been involved in a little legal work. Can you say "extradition?" Good. How about "framed?" I knew that you could.

Today we're going to visit the Harding laundromat. We'll get to see real college students washing their clothes. I'm so excited I could throw bricks. C'mon, Mr. Trolley, let's go! Mr. Trolley? Uh-oh. I forgot. Boys and girls... let me explain.

Mr. Writer had to sell Mr. Trolley last year when some men who wore dark suits came to get some money from Mr. Writer. Let's not talk about that anymore. Let's start our journey.

Mr. Golf Cart? Come on! Here's our new friend, Mr. Golf Cart. I know it says "Searcy Country Club" on the side, but I paid for it. Luther made me a good deal on it.

Well, here we go.

Wee, isn't this fun? Mr. Writer has a game he likes to play with Mr. Golf Cart. It's called, "Tag, you're hit!" Squirrels are worth ten points, the same with walking students. Students running to class are worth 20 points. Bicyclists are 50 points and faculty/staff members are worth 100. Splitting apart groups or couples aren't worth anything, but their terrified squeals could rival the most astute hog-caller in Arkansas.

Look, boys and girls, it's the laundromat. This is where boys go once a month to hose down their clothes. Right next to the laundromat is a sign that says "Swimming Pool," but we don't believe that, do we? We've never seen anyone go in there.

Let's go into the laundromat. What do you say?

See all the college students washing their clothes. They're such a clean bunch. If I were their mothers, I sure would be proud.

Here comes College Boy. Notice that all of his clothes are pink. He must be a swell guy to do a girl's laundry. Let's engage in small talk with him. Shall we?

some more. Hey! Look in this dryer. There seems to be a person in it. We better open it to see if he's okay.

"Hello, young man, what gives?"

"Hello, Mr. Writer. Excuse me while I sniff my brains back into my head... ahh, the thought process. What a wonderful thing."

"Are you okay? What happened?"

"Oh, I was feeling a little giddy and I showed my girlfriend's 'ALF' underwear to everyone. I don't remember much after that, except hearing an evil

by
Randy Williams

"Hello, College Boy!"

"Oh. Hello, Mr. Writer."

"What's the matter? You sound down."

"Well, I still can't do laundry right."

"Gee, it looks fine to me."

"What? Obviously, you're blind, you insensitive goat. I washed this new red shirt with everything and now everything I own is pink!"

"Oh, I see now. Have fun with the bleach. Be sure and use a lot. Heh-heh."

What an interesting boy. Can you say "incompetent loser?" I knew that you could. Let's look around cackle and something about a pocketful of quarters."

"Well, I hope you're doing okay."

"I'll be fine, Mr. Writer. Have you seen my hair?"

"No, I'm trying to quit." I think it's time to go, boys and girls. We've had enough fun for one day. Mr. Golf Cart? Hurry now!

Be sure to come back next week when we look at Harding's Mysteries of the Unknown. We'll take a special look at Chris "Fajita" Gonzales. Why won't he shave his moustache? Is he hiding something? Until then, take it greasy and don't buy generic spaghetti.

Chapel Checkers' chuckle file: Top 10

Students give 'good' reasons for skipping chapel

by Sharon Bowles
Bison staff writer

It's 9 a.m., two and a half minutes later, the chapel checkers begin their daily ritual: checking for skippers.

Students miss chapel daily. Some are excused and others are mere skips. Later in the week, students can submit excuses for their lack of morning activity. Of those excuses submitted, some make it to the "chapel laugh file."

Here are the ten funniest excuses that have actually been submitted. Some of these were excused; others, well... what do you think?

10. "I had to work those days to pay for my parking tickets."

9. "I was on my way to chapel when I dropped some things. While I was picking them up, my pants split down the middle seam, so I had to go back home and change."

8. "My wife works and the only time we have together is during the lunch hour. We need chapel time together to get things done."

7. "I was homesick, had my bags packed and signed out of school on Thursday. On Friday afternoon I received a vision from the Lord and he instructed me to stay. It's rough being away from home.. (a true story)."

6. "I had to study for a Jimmy Allen test."

5. "Sorry, but I graduated and moved away. Didn't realize that I needed to commute from Los Angeles everyday."

4. "After I got up yesterday morning, I took my morning jog at 6:00 a.m. After getting ready for chapel early, I ate two bowls of cereal. The milk was obviously of a substandard nature. After a few moments, severe stomach cramps began to interfere with my normal morning functions. At this point, I decided something must be done. Suspecting Hydro-tetra-ethyl-clorinal poisoning, I had my roommate (the most skilled available driver) speed me to the emergency room. I subsequently began to feel better and am now feeling my normal chipper self."

3. "I missed chapel Friday because I was out of town. However, it was for a very special reason. I got ENGAGED Friday!! and we went to Houston to show my folks (I couldn't just call 'em). Therefore, I think it should be excused. P.S. I promise I will never use this reason as an excuse again."

2. "I was taking a shower and getting ready for chapel. What I didn't know was, my roommate had already left and closed the door behind him, locking me out. According to dress code, I couldn't wear my towel to chapel. By the time I found someone to unlock my door, it was too late."

1. "I was putting my contacts on this morning and I put one in my mouth to clean it. I accidentally inhaled, and my contact was swept down into my trachea. I was then forced to GAG myself to recover it. After I finally got it up, I had to dig through the mess to locate my contact. I then proceeded to put it on but still had a horrible time because I had drive heaves — I recovered after about 30 minutes — Sorry I missed chapel!"

Next time you have a wild chapel excuse, go ahead and submit your excuse. If nothing else you will make the chapel checkers chuckle.

Proposed night club awaits word on liquor license

by Greg Taylor
Bison editor

Forty Harding students joined an estimated 300 persons last Friday in Little Rock to protest a prospective "country club" which is awaiting construction near Hwy. 67, pending a decision by the Arkansas Beverage Control Board (ABC) whether to grant a liquor license to the "club."

Although White County is "dry," which means no liquor can be sold over the counter, several establishments like the American Legion, the Searcy Golf and Country Club, and the VFW Post — all "non-profit organizations" — are allowed to have liquor inside.

The decision whether to license the club has met with "more opposition" than Robert Moore, Commissioner of the ABC, has seen while serving on the Board. The protest came in the form of over 7,000 signatures submitted to the Board last Friday by White County residents. Student Association President Mark Moore led a student petition on the Harding campus and added about 700 signatures to the list.

Representatives from both sides of the issue spoke and presented signatures. Joe Emmeric, the proponent of the club who wants to build where the old "Fiddler's Catfish House" once stood, brought about 100 signatures, but withdrew several because they were not properly verified. Emmeric, the owner of a club in Jacksonville, plans to build only if the license is granted.

Searcy Mayor Glen Pledger said Searcy does not have the funds to increase the police force which he said would be necessary if the club was licensed for liquor.

White County Judge Gerald Parish opposes the licensing saying, "I sent a letter to the board and sent a representative from the county to the meeting last Friday. We don't need that kind of club in White County. I don't think it will ever fly, so we don't have a thing to worry about."

The club would allow patrons to buy a ten dollar membership, buy mixed drinks, and dance.

The ABC Board is expected to make a decision in the next week and will meet again, this time not publicly, to make the decision to license the club or not. The board is not a court, neither are the members elected officials — they are appointed by state government.

Moore, the commissioner, mentioned he was impressed with the turnout at the public hearing last Friday. He said the opposition made more of a statement by their presence than anyone could have said during the meeting.

The meeting was held in a 70-person capacity room and over 300 attended and stood in the hallways to listen to the debate.

Three local church buses helped carry White County citizens to the hearing.

"We try to pump water to the dorms for showers at about 160 to 170 degrees," Ryan said.

Ryan does not anticipate anymore problems with lack of heat in the dorms as long as the weather cooperates.

trouble, but the weather should be warming up. I think we are over the hump for now," Ryan said.

Hornsby studied music at the University of Miami and the Berkley School of Music. He and his brother, John, tried writing formula pop songs for a publishing company for three years in Los Angeles. After this, they turned to music of their own roots. Hornsby figures he contacted about ten record labels a year for seven years before signing with RCA in 1985. This is what Hornsby believes is his biggest achievement.

Iceberg to captivate hearts Feb. 14

by Susan Arnette
Bison assistant editor

Michael Iceberg and his "Iceberg Machine" will perform in the Benson Auditorium Tuesday, Feb. 14 at 7:30 p.m.

Iceberg returns to Harding for about the fourth time. The "Iceberg Machine" consists of seven synthesizers, a drum computer and a multitude of special effects and mechanical devices. His music ranges from pop to classical to original works.

The Iceberg Machine was conceptualized in Aspen, Col., in 1969. In the last five years, Iceberg has switched his Machine completely over to digital. In 1976, Iceberg began working full-time for Walt Disney World in Florida. He worked there until 1982.

In 1979, Iceberg began his national tour of American universities. In the spring of 1980, Iceberg had the distinguished honor of performing the first concert in the Benson Auditorium. At that time he performed before a crowd of 1800 to 2200 people. Within the last four years, Iceberg has begun to limit his performances to corporate conventions rather than college campuses. He has changed his audience focus mostly because of the salary potential and because college campuses were giving him a poor showing.

Seats for the concert are reserved but tickets can be obtained for $3.00 through the Student Activities Committee. For tickets, call Dr. Barnes or Steve Beliech at Ext. 255.

Diabetes hits one in one hundred

Acceptance of diagnosis crucial to successful management

"Sugar is sweet and so are you" smacks of valentine sentiment...unless you happen to have diabetes.

Affecting approximately one percent of the population, "diabetes mellitus" refers to a condition of elevated sugar (glucose) in the blood. Serum glucose responds to the presence or absence of insulin, a hormone produced by specialized cells within the pancreas. Under normal circumstances insulin is released to help metabolize foods containing various kinds of sugars. The pancreas titrates the amount of insulin available in order to keep the blood sugar within an acceptable range.

If the control mechanism for insulin release becomes altered, the serum glucose is allowed to rise. Blood sugars which remain elevated eventually produce symptoms.

Onset of excessive thirst, frequent urination, insatiable appetite and weight loss frequently herald the onset of diabetes. Rapid onset of these symptoms during childhood, adolescence or early adulthood often requires injections of insulin for control. If symptoms develop more slowly in later years, adequate therapy may include oral medicines and a selective diet.

In either type of diabetes (insulin dependent or non-insulin dependent), maintenance of an ideal body weight is important to successful management.

Diabetes need not destine one to a life of solitary confinement. Often, it is the acceptance of the diagnosis which is crucial to successful management. Learning how to manipulate diet and medication can reduce long term complications of disease and allow for a minimally restricted lifestyle.

INSIDE HARDING

Enrollment up again

The number of applications accepted by January 31 for admission by Harding University for the Fall of 1989 is 313 students, twice the number that were accepted this time last spring.

By February 3, 1988, only 152 students had been accepted.

The number of applications has risen 28 percent over the January 1988 totals, says Jim White, director of admission services. He added that space limitations for campus housing will determine the number accepted for the fall semester.

Supervised teaching

Harding seniors certifying to teach have been assigned to more than 20 schools in the Searcy area for nine weeks of supervised classroom teaching. The experience is a requirement for teacher certification.

Dr. Bobby Coker, Dean of Harding's accredited School of Education, said that 88 seniors are included in the spring assignments. The students spend the first part of the semester in block classes making preparation for their day-to-day assignments, and each works under the supervision of a permanent classroom teacher and a university supervisor.

Lung association

The Aerobics for Lung Power benefit exhibition is being held Saturday, Feb. 18 from 1:00 to 3:00 p.m. at the Carmichael Center in Searcy.

The registration fee for the event is $5.00 per person. With this fee, participants will receive a T-shirt. All proceeds from the registration fees will be given to the American Lung Association of Arkansas. The event is being co-sponsored by the Sweat Shop, Just Aerobix, Aerobics Unlimited, and Central Arkansas General Hospital.

Numerous door prizes provided by Reflections, Van Atkins, Shoney's, L.A. Sport, and Jacques Moret will be given away.

To pre-register for this event, call 268-4821 or 268-6414.

Small business

During early February, Harding University and the Small Business Administration (SBA), will provide a few small businesses an opportunity for free management counseling.

Over 160 small business owners in the Searcy area have been assisted by the Small Business Institute (SBI) Program over the last 14 years. In the upcoming semester, both an instructor and a student team will work closely with the business owner(s) to develop a confidential and professional review.

The instructor guiding the program is Dr. Robert Reely who is in his seventh year as the SBI Coordinator. He is also the Director of the Harding Center for Management Excellence.

ATTENTION BSN CLASS OF 1989.

The Air Force has a special program for 1989 BSNs. If selected, you can enter active duty soon after graduation—without waiting for the results of your State Boards. To qualify, you must have an overall 2.75 GPA. After commissioning, you'll attend a five-month internship at a major Air Force medical facility. It's an excellent way to prepare for the wide range of experiences you'll have serving your country as an Air Force nurse officer. For more information, call

Valentine Messages

Wanted ... a man. A male person with the ability to communicate and to express his feelings, and with the willingness to do so. Mandatory — A true desire to serve God and a willingness to lift others up in His sight.

Also desired — one who is not ashamed to laugh or to cry... who is willing to give and to receive... who will share as well as listen.

Yes, a real man, does he exist? If you find one, see one, or know one, please satisfy our curiosity and send a note to Campus Mail, Box 1348.

BJ,
We've got what it takes to make it. All we need is a little patience.
G.N.R.,
Sharon

To Sharon (my lead guitarist and best friend),
Don't let your dreams be clouded,
Aim your sights high,
Search for your true feeling, and
Reach for the Sky!
Happy Valentine's Day,
B.J.

"One and Two"

Today is dying in the West;
My eyes, though glazed and read,
Embrace a sudden peaceful glow
From something she once said:

"It's not my task to bring about
A beginning, or an end;
It is but mine to stop and dream
Of things that might have been."

Today it was the fragrant bloom
Of orchids, red and white,
That brought my mind her memory,
And gave my darkness light.

And yesterday, the morning rain
That fell from Heaven's door,
Brought visions of her soft blue eyes
Beheld in years before.

The winds that carry quiet thoughts
Of years not lived again,
Speak softly to this broken heart
Of things that might have been.

The briefness of our walk in life
I realize every day;
Yet images of her remain
While others fade away.

I will not give my life to dreams,
My hope for such is gone;
For though our future paths won't meet,
My life continues on.

Tomorrow yields another day;
The sun will rise again;
I'll sit alone once more, and think
Of things that might have been.

Dear Christopher C. Davis:
I would love to hear your sweet voice.
Happy Valentine's Day.

Doni,
A year ago in January you stepped into my life and we became friends. You were always there when I needed you. As our friendship grew, I began to see something special in you. I wasn't sure what that feeling was until you began to show me that it was love. You understood me and my needs. You've helped me become the person I am. I've never known a love like the one you've given me. You are my best friend, my love, and my life. My hope for the future is to give you a love like you've given me and I hope I can make you as happy as you make me. Through the good times and the bad, the tears and the laughter, I have confidence in our love because we can lean on each other!
Happy Valentine's Day!
Love you, Forever yours, Tami

Italian and American cultures: Worlds apart, but oh so close

She grew up in Atlanta, Ga. He was raised in the hills of Southern Italy. They lived in separate cultures and saw two very different perspectives. When they met they shared pictures of one another's families, discussed each other's countries and talked about the Bible.

Sally and Franco Zengaro met in Cosenza, Italy, in 1984 where Franco was born. A mutual friend introduced them not only to each other, but to a completely different way of life from their own. Now they are married and live in Searcy. Franco is a student at Harding and Sally, who graduated from Harding in 1983, works as a secretary in the English Department.

"It doesn't matter where you raise your children. What matters is how you raise them," Franco said.

Though Sally's first language is English, she spoke Italian when they met. This was Sally's fourth visit to Italy. She had visited Harding University in Florence and had been on two summer campaigns. This time she was in the country for a year to work with the Robisons and Holloways, missionary families in Cosenza.

"I felt like I could speak the language well, but I couldn't understand what was said back to me," Sally said laughing.

Franco remembers their introduction.

"At the beginning it was very interesting. I didn't know English, so she spoke to me in Italian," he said. "Her understanding of the language was very good, so I didn't find it difficult to talk to her, but sometimes we had misunderstandings because non-verbal communication made by Italians can mean something different for me (than for Americans)," he said.

But Franco's love for Sally was not misunderstood. He told her he loved her the first day they met, Sally recalls.

"It is common for Southern Italian men to express their love for someone early in a relationship."

"Vuoi sposarmi," Franco said to Sally. It means, "would you become my spouse." Although she didn't blurt out any promises to Franco's proposal, Sally knew the future looked good for them. "I knew if we started a relationship, we would eventually get married," she said. "When I first met him, I just felt like we always knew each other. I've never even felt that comfortable around an American," Sally said.

Though they felt comfortable together, their cultures clashed — pace of life, language, education, family values, and dozens of other cultural patterns were opposite poles.

Fact is, things would never be the same for Franco and Sally.

While Franco was confident about his love for Sally, he was not sure about the possibility of a relationship springing out of Italian and American soils.

"I was in the military and attending the university in Italy, and she was going back to the United States," he said.

But they dated anyway for four months. Sally returned to the U.S. in February, 1985. In May of that year, Franco traveled 12,000 miles and showed up at Sally's door in Atlanta.

Franco's "visit allowed him to meet my family and to know the culture I come from," Sally said.

It wasn't easy for Franco.

"There were many people I didn't know, and I didn't speak the language," he said.

Language was not the only problem Franco and Sally faced. Would the cultural differences erode their relationship? One of them would always be away from home. Because of money and work, the visits could not continue. The two had to decide if their love was enough to span the culture gap. Could they leave their homes?

Franco remembers the decision.

"It's hard to leave a place where you've been all your life and to go where you don't know what it is like," he said. Franco loves his country. "Italy has an immense history

— it's a great place to live. People really care."

Franco, however, came back to the U.S. — but this time, to stay. Seven months after his first visit to see Sally in Atlanta, Franco returned to the U.S. Then, ten days later, on Feb. 22, 1986, he married Sally in Atlanta.

Now the two live in Searcy. The two love Italy but have chosen to live here while finishing their education.

The two live in the Harding East Married Student Apartments. They have been at Harding for over two years.

Franco has been studying psychology at Harding for two years, and in that time he has learned to speak English.

SALLY and FRANCO

"I am just as confident in speaking English now as I am in Italian," he said. Sally helped to teach Franco English. She would like to teach others English as a second language as well. She hopes to go to graduate school to learn that skill after Franco graduates in Fall 1989.

It has become natural for Franco and Sally to speak in both languages in their home, Franco said. "We integrate English and Italian. It is automatic to communicate in both languages."

Language was not their only obstacle — a wall divided their religious convictions. She was a member of the Church of Christ. He was Catholic. How did the two tear down the wall which divided them? Instead of defending institutions, they were guided by the words of the Bible only — not the traditions of either group to which they were accustomed.

"We are saved by grace," Franco says, "not by the law." And Sally agrees.

The two have not only united in language and religion, but also in family values.

"I had no second thoughts about our relationship," Sally said. "What transcended (the cultural barriers) was our morals."

But what they do want is to have a family. They don't worry about where they will raise their children, whether in Italy or the U.S.

"It doesn't matter where you raise your children. What matters is how you raise them," Franco said.

What is in the future for the Zengaros?

The two hope to pursue the "Italian Dream" in Italy.

"I'd like to go back where I'm from and take care of my family," Franco said.

Until the two go back to Italy, however, they are happy to be in the United States.

"Some people cannot accept reality, but I accept it," Franco said. "America is a good place. I don't think it is possible to feel 'at home' here. One is always a guest no matter how many years he stays in a foreign country," he said.

But then, one of them will always be a guest, because she was born in Atlanta, and he in the hills of Southern Italy.

Cook, no longer dreaming, now making history

by Rachel Garrison

On the Friday of Halloween weekend last year when most people were thinking of tricking or treating, Todd Cook, a Harding freshman, was preparing for a weekend of anticipation. He was going to find out how he stood against the finest fiddle players in the nation.

As Todd and his family drove from Russellville, Ark. to Mountain View, Ark., the 18-year-old wondered who would be there. Would the competition be stiff? He was coming to the most prestigious contest he had yet to enter, the nationals sponsored by the Society for the Preservation of Blue Grass Music in America (SPBGMA). He could not believe he had come this far when he thought back to his first experience with the violin.

Todd said his mother tells him a story of his first experiences that he was too young to remember. She said when Todd was 11 years old a family friend, Boone Carlon, visited often. Every time Boone visited he showed Todd how to play a "hot lick" on the fiddle. Then Todd would leave his parents to visit with Boone and he would practice what he had learned. After a while Boone would shout, "Oh, I think he's got it!"

Later on Todd took one year of violin lessons but he learned more from people showing him how to play "hot licks" and from trying to imitate tapes. While Todd attended Metro Christian School violin lessons were not offered, but Todd continued practicing fiddle about an hour each day. Todd said, "I never practice if I don't want to because I know I won't get anything done."

When Todd prepares for a contest he practices two or three hours a day. Todd has picked up many pointers at contests from other contestants. "I never met a mean fiddle player," Todd said. They are always eager to help. So Todd looks forward to seeing the old friends from former contests at the nationals.

Round one of the contest began. One by one each of the 30 contestants performed a hoedown and a waltz to a 1,000 member crowd. "If the audience doesn't make you nervous, the judges will," Todd said.

With 30 contestants the show can become monotonous. Todd's mother says one song sounds just like the others, until Todd plays.

The large number required the Friday night round one to recess until Saturday morning. So Todd went back to the Ozark Folk Center Lodge to get some sleep.

Early Saturday morning round one resumed. Eventually Todd's turn came. He played "Sally Johnson" for his hoedown and "The Dreamer's Waltz" for his waltz.

Examining his score Todd was surprised to find that he had scored as high as fourth but he knew things could change in the second round. "The musicians work harder each round. The scores jump around and can be higher or lower," Todd said. After an intermission when a local group entertained, round two began.

The contestants got new numbers and began to repeat the steps of round one, playing different hoedowns and waltzes. Todd's version of "Tom and Jerry" and "Whistler's Waltz" earned him fifth place, well within the top 15 cut off, which qualified him for round three.

So ending Saturday's session the participants retired to the lodge where they shared musical tips. "In Houston they might throw us out for playing music in the lobby but in Mountain View they don't mind," Todd said.

Sunday brought round three with the chance to be declared national fiddle champion and walk away with $1,000 cash. The beginning 30 contestants had been narrowed down to the 15 best in the nation.

Todd had been in this spot for the last two years scoring 14th in 1986 and 13th in 1987. This year his goal was to make top ten. It would not be long until he would know if he had reached that goal.

Round three began. In addition to playing a hoedown and a waltz, the contestants also played a song of their choice. Todd played "Soppin' the Gravy" (hoedown), "Morning Star" (waltz), and his choice was "The Wild Fiddler's Rag." The competition was intense. Finally the last contestant played the last note and it was time for the judges to tally the scores. The clock ticked by 10..20..30 minutes. At last the judges quit writing and looked up. Then came time to announce the top ten winners who would each receive a cash prize. They announced numbers 10..9..8..7..6..5, Todd Cook. Wild applause broke out from the 30 Russellville Church of Christ members that had come to cheer Todd on.

"My friends have been real supportive. Without them I would not be where I am today," Todd said.

And so that Halloween weekend Todd went home with a trophy, $200, and the achievement of surpassing his goal to make top ten. He was proclaimed fifth-best fiddle player in the nation by the SPBGMA.

Human Resources major offers both management and psychology

by Trish Shanklin
Bison staff writer

Harding has established a new major this year called human resources. The program is a combination of the School of Business and the Department of Psychology.

George Oliver, Assistant Dean of the School of Business, commented that there are about 50 students who have declared human resources as their major. "It is an area that is growing," he said.

The major requires 31 semester hours of psychology and 30 semester hours of business courses. Mike Foster, who began as a management major, switched because, "I was convinced that management was all business and no people. This major gives me both."

Michelle Vann began as a marketing major, changed to social work, then heard of human resources which seemed ideal for her. She stated, "It seems to be the major of the future."

The career opportunities for these majors seem very diversified. Students can go into each end, business or psychology. Vann said, "One can go into personnel, working with groups, hiring, training, or counseling."

Oliver commented about job opportunities. "It gives someone a broader base in management. It can be used in investigative services, judicial capacity, or people orientation."

Foster stated, "It applies to any business. It is the business side plus working with people."

One elective which might be added to the curriculum is an internship with local businesses in personnel and other departments. The internship would involve one day a week for nine to 12 weeks.

Dr. Oliver and Dr. Robert McKelvain, Associate Professor in the Psychology Department, have had this major in the making for several years. Oliver feels the growth of the major will even out. Yet, with more awareness and a little fine tuning the number of enrollees will increase.

Valentine's Day began to honor martyr; past days remembered

by Angie Haley
Bison staff writer

Charlie Brown is still waiting for the little red-haired girl to send him a Valentine.

I remember the days of elementary school when I waited for that special one to drop a Valentine in my box. I still have a few of them tucked away from first grade. One in particular is my favorite. It reads: "To: Miss Angie Haley, Row 5, Seat 2, From: Scott Wilferd. Be my Valentine. Don't tell anyone that I love you."

Dad has always been my number one Valentine. He always brought home a box of Russell Stovers Chocolates. I love chocolate, but to this day I still do the same thing to my box of candy. I squish every one to see what is inside. There's nothing worse than biting into an orange marmelade-pistachio-cherry crunch when you're expecting a caramel.

Someone needs to invent a chocolate X-ray machine.

Then there's that wonderful infamous candy that comes along with every Valentine's Day — the chalk-like, tiny, heart-shaped candy with expressions stamped on each one like, "hot stuff" and "Cutie Pie." They come in extremes from "Marry Me" to "Why me?"

Now Valentine's Day is so much different. It's a holiday where the guys and gals don't see things eye to eye, or should I say, heart to heart. It can make or break a girl's heart and a guy's wallet. During those elementary school days, a cheap little Valentine out of a box of 25 meant as much as a dozen roses does today. We should take a lesson from that little round head kid who would be satisfied with just one Valentine. Here's to Charlie Brown.

Did you ever wonder where we got the crazy day called Valentine's Day?

As children we would pass out our little cards to those certain persons we had crushes on, but why?

Valentine's Day began in 269 when Saint Valentine (the saint of lovers) was martyred.

The sending of romantic messages began in the late middle ages. The people believed that birds began to mate on Feb. 14, so this suggested to them the idea of sending gifts and messages to their lovers. When America's postal system was organized, this tradition blossomed into our present tradition.

What are the highlights of today's tradition? Some of the Harding faculty members' wives remember.

Leah Burks, wife of President Burks, recalls the roses that Dr. Burks sent her. Louise Ganus, wife of Chancellor Ganus, remembers one day when her husband sent her a singing telegram. Dr. Joe Pryor's wife, Bessie Mae, says Dr. Joe is always thoughtful on this day, as always. Beth Cox, wife of Monte Cox (Harding's visiting missionaries this year) remembers a card that Monte made for her while they were students at Harding. It was called the A, B, C's of you and me, and each page was a memory starting with each letter of the alphabet.

Four clubs get sacked

At least they can still play on television

by Rick Butler
Bison sports

Rules were made to be broken.

An old saying that has been used for decades. Well, in club sports at Harding, if you don't follow the eligibility rules, you don't play and your club doesn't play.

In the past two weeks four men's clubs, Titans, Bucs, Theta Tau and Sub-T, have been dropped from the Potluck basketball tournament. Theta Tau was dropped after they failed to field a team for a game. Soon after, Titans, Bucs, and Sub-T were booted after using inactive members in games.

Sure it's disappointing for the clubs that had hoped to play, and possibly beat, these teams in the tournament. Maybe it does take away from the quality and excitement of the tournament. Yes, it does.

Marty De Jarnette, Athletic Director of Alpha Tau, says, "Mr. Beck sends letters to all of the athletic directors which say not to play an inactive member. I support Mr. Beck 100 percent."

Dave Freeman, a casualty of Inactive Rule Number One, says, "I was inactive and didn't get to play. The athletic directors are to blame."

Ken Weinhardt, also of Alpha Tau, feels that the importance of selecting a good A.D. cannot be stressed enough. "This happens every year. It seems like the A.D.'s would be more careful."

Brett Biggs summed it up with, "Everyone knows the rules."

How true! At least everyone should know the rules. Mr. Beck has used the same format for years. It has worked for years.

If these clubs are angry about not getting to play potluck basketball, my advice is to either find a new A.D. or keep mouthing Mr. Beck while you're figuring out a way to win softball after starting in the loser's bracket.

Oh, yes, these clubs will have a chance to redeem themselves in the first-ever Director's Basketball Tournament for A, B, and C teams. More details will be available at a later date.

Our Intramural Athlete of the Week Award goes to former Bison standout Tim Smallwood. Tim sparked Alpha Tau to a victory over Chi Sigs with his pressure defense and scored 30 points as Alpha Tau blew out Kappa Sigs in the semi-finals.

Tennis team opens season

Two seniors lead the Bison tennis team into action this year. Ruy Martinez and Greg Barden are the only seniors on the young squad coached by David Elliott.

The Bisons open conference play at Hendrix College Feb. 16 and their first home match is set for Feb. 17 against Oklahoma Christian College.

Women's and men's club basketball

Women's Club Basketball Championship was put off to one more game when GATA upset Kojies in overtime 31 to 29.

July Crosswhite hit two free throws with 30 seconds left to tie the game at the end of regulation time 25 to 25. The Kojies missed three free throws in the last 30 seconds of overtime with the score tied at 29. Then with three seconds left Kojies fouled Susan Malone to put her on the line with a chance to win the game. Malone sank both free throws to clinch the win. Cheryl Green was the leading scorer for GATA and Sheila McFall and Margaret Eoff led scoring for Kojies.

Domination defined by Webster is to rule or control by superior power. Domination defined by this year's men's potluck tournament was Kappa Tau Omega.

Kappa Tau won A, C, D, and E team championships this week in club basketball's big tournament. B and F team titles were captured by Kappa Sigs, while TNT won the G team competition.

In the A-team final Kappa Tau defeated Alpha Tau 56-48 in a thriller Wednesday night. Alpha Tau took a 26-21 lead going into halftime by slowing the pace of the game with their half court offense and strong defensive play.

In the second half Kappa Tau's running game was let loose, and when Alpha Tau guard Tim Smallwood fouled out with five minutes left in the game, Kappa Tau tied the score 44-44. Kappa Tau then went on a 12-4 run with Kenny Hightower icing the victory with a fast break dunk.

Matt Patton had 20 points and Todd Adair pulled down nine rebounds for the winners. Smallwood scored 17 points before picking up his fifth foul. "The key to the game was us not getting back on defense in the second half," said Alpha Tau forward Marty De Jarnette. "Smallwood fouling out was also a major factor in the game."

Kappa Sigs was in control most of the game to defeat Chi Sigs 53-45 in the B-team championship. Mike Crittendon led all scorers with 12 points.

BISONS VS. HENDRIX

The Bisons fell to Hendrix College last Thursday night, 81-79. The game was intense from the opening tip until the final buzzer. Corey Camper did everything possible for the Bisons as he scored 24 points and pulled down 15 rebounds. Harding had a chance to win in the final seconds, but Camper missed two shots in the lane as the Warriors escaped with the victory.

BISONS VS. HENDERSON

Harding men's basketball team lost a tough one against Henderson State University Jan. 30. David James and Corey Camper each had 25 points to lead the Bisons.

BISONS VS. OZARKS

The Bisons lost a heartbreaker to the University of the Ozarks Monday night, 67-65. Ozarks hit three of four free throws in the final seconds to win the game. The Bisons had balanced scoring with Corey Camper's 20 points, David James' 15, Carl Collins' 11, and Chad Bradley's 10.

The Bisons scored one point in a four minute span as Ozarks made a 10 to 1 run.

BISONS VS. ARKANSAS TECH LAST NIGHT

This conference game was played at home last night after press time.

TOMORROW NIGHT

The Bisons play a conference game away tomorrow night against Arkansas College.

Lady Bisons

by David VanBuskirk
Bison sports

The Harding University Lady Bisons won two games at home last week before falling to the University of the Ozarks Monday night in an AIC confrontation.

An early 8-1 run pulled the Lady Bisons ahead of the Henderson State Lady Reddies and eventually helped the Lady Bisons to a 69-66 victory in Ganus Athletic Center last week. Carrie White led the Lady Bisons with 21 points, followed by Kara Hutchinson and Syrena Burch with 11 points each. Burch added 15 rebounds to her effort.

The Lady Bisons won their second consecutive home game last Thursday with a 70-64 victory over Arkansas Baptist College.

Against Arkansas Baptist, Harding's ladies jumped out early and never trailed, although the Lady Buffaloes stayed within close range through most of the contest. Harding's lead expanded to as many as 15 points in the second half before head coach Phil Watkins cleared his bench in the final minutes. The Lady Bisons led 38-32 at halftime, thanks in part to three three-point shots by Lisa Kirk.

In the second half, Burch had the hot hand with 11 of her team leading 19 points coming in the final 20 minutes. Kirk added 11 points, and Julie Roddy scored 10. Burch and Roddy tallied 11 rebounds each.

Harding's women were downed by the University of the Ozarks 74-71 in Clarksville Monday night. The Lady Eagles jumped out quickly against the Lady Bisons and never looked back. Ozarks led 35-22 at the half. The loss put the Lady Bisons at 3-6 in conference play and 7-13 overall this season.

scorers with 17 points and teammate David Echols added 12 points, hitting two three-pointers. Chi Sigs was led by Greg Yokum's 16 points in their losing cause.

The C-team final matched club rivals Kappa Tau and Kappa Sigs. Kappa Sigs led at half 26-16 but watched their lead slip away when they were forced to play with four players after Andy Thomas fouled out with eight minutes left. With no time on the clock Troy Carter hit one of two free throws to tie the score 43-43. In overtime, freshman Todd Rhinehart hit a bankshot with 35 seconds remaining to give Kappa Tau a 47-46 victory. Rhinehart led all scorers with 16 points. Kappa Sigs was led by Rocky Jones and Darren Howard who had 15 points and 13 points respectively.

All A, B, and C teams are competing in the Director's Cup which begins play tonight. This is the last tournament of the semester, so everyone come out and support your club teams hoop for the final time this year.

Men's Basketball Intramurals climaxed with the major league championship game which pitted the Mavericks against the Hawks. The game was close throughout the first half, but in the second half the Mavericks took control and never looked back. The Mavs' fast break offense proved to be too much for the Hawks. Todd Adair was the leading scorer for the Mavericks canning 20 points. Dave Preston and Richard Shannon added 11 and ten, respectively. John Kodatt led in scoring for the Hawks with 20 points and Kenny Hightower put in 12 in a losing effort.

The minor league championship game matched up the Bulldogs and the Webbedfeet. This game was a nail-biter to the end when, with ten seconds left, Brett Raymond hit a triple-pump fall away jumper in the lane to give the Bulldogs the game 31 to 29. Brett Raymond and Andy Reda had eight points for the Bulldogs. Darren Matthews put in 11 points for the Webbedfeet.
